This could not be America. Conclusion In light of the global ethnographic study of Beardstown, the social vitality of Beardstown, unlike its neighboring small towns, may seem less like the anomaly that we viewed in the opening of this paper. Ironically, the artificial expansion of the agricultural labor market not only dissuades our farmers from exploiting America's comparative advantage in technology and capital, but using cheap foreign labor to produce fruit and vegetables for export actually subsidizes foreign consumers, since about one-fifth of our country's fruit, vegetable, and horticultural production is exported. The student movement produced a generation of future political leaders, including Richard Alatorre and Cruz Bustamante in California.

In Beardstown they almost all arrive through legal residency and work permits. Biking, disc golf mark seasons shift at Stevens. Widely known for its winter wonderland, summer at Stevens Pass offers other opportunities. Reflections of a First Year Teacher.
