In the fifth letter to Clarke, Leibniz says : " This supposition of two indiscernibles seems indeed to be possible in abstract terms ; but it is not consistent with the order of things, nor with the divine wisdom, by which nothing is admitted without reason ' ' D. Pre-established harmony obviates the need to introduce immaterial plastic natures or vital principles as causal agents within matter .

By holding tight to Idealism and rejecting all others, Bennett needlessly impoverishes himself and his readers. They are, in a way, extensions of views found earlier in the seventeenth century, 56 most prominently in Descartes and Hobbes, while at the same time they constitute 57 a profound critique of those same views.
